For example, you can learn a new word today and remember yourself what it means again tonight before going to bed. Then you could remember Again mange, and then wait two days before trying. Then, he could try himself after one week, after two weeks and after one month. If the test fails, condense the rest período before trying again. If it does well, it makes the rest permit a little while the next time. An related effective learning is interspersed with the information you already know with what you are learning. For example, if you are learning two new words, try to be tested in a set of words that you already know and add these new words among family members. Entering plays in our natural tendencies to detect atmosphere and values, according to the UCLA Bob Bjork researcher. As you learn new words, keep adding them to your study list. Over time, you will continue reviewing the words you have learned, in addition to improving your ability to collect new words by interspersing them. Using visualsidd. Do you know that 50% of brain resources are used only in vision? We pass half of our brain power to notice the movement, shapes and colors around us. Our eyes not only have energy, they are also sponges to obtain information. If you use visual aids to remember themselves who mean the new words, it is more likely to take that information for the first time and remember it later. In fact, we even treat the text as images: our brains see many of the things. Small images in the página. In comparison with looking at an image, it is much less efficient to trust the text for learning. Work with cards based on images or adding images to your vocabulary definitions to accelerate the learning process. Petent that some scientists continue to work what happens in our bodies when we are asleep, it is clear that the dream plays an important role in learning. If you learn something and you take a nap before being tested on it, you are more likely to remember it than if you were tested after an interval that did not include any dream. It seems that during the dream our short-term memories (including the things we just learned) are consolidated into long-term memory. If we do not fall asleep, this process cannot happen and it is more likely that we lose the information we have just learned. It is important to sleep long before learning something new. By consolidating your memories, the dream essentially erases the "input tray" of your brain all short-term memories that you have accumulated throughout the day. Eliminating them gives you more space to assimilate new information and improve your ability to learn. Getting new words can take time and effort, but these applications and resources make it a fun and simple process. However, when you intend to expand your own vocabulary, keep in mind that you could find a totally new technique that works for you.
